Jedd's "Last Chance" fundraiser for STARS

From September 22 to 25, Jedd Serben, a young man of only 15, hosted a fundraiser at his family's local farm, Serben Farms, at 59246 Range Road 180, near Smoky Lake. The young man started selling lemonade during the summer months of 2018. The fundraiser included selling freshly squeezed lemonade and delicious ice cream. The lemonade is freshly squeezed and bottled by Jedd himself.

On December 2, 2019, Jedd and his little brother Jacob Serben were involved in a life-threatening motor vehicle accident. They were riding on a school bus when a picker truck collided with them. Jedd sustained life-threatening injuries. STARS Air Ambulance rushed Jedd to the Stollery Children's Hospital that day, saving his life. Mother Julia Seben said, "We will always hold this amazing organization close to our hearts, as do many others who live rurally and

Save trees by signing up for E-Billing

Spruce trees are native to Alberta and are the leading type of tree and the primary source of creating paper. By switching to E-Billing services today with your Thorhild County utilities, you could help cut down the costs for sending bills and payments and save a tree's life.

By Myrina Carter

Thorhild County is now offering E-Billing services with proposed utilities through the county. Allowing customers to have the opportunity to save on time and trees and save money by changing paper bills and receiving monthly utility bills electronically.

What does the change to receiving bills electronically mean for you? Switching to E-Billing saves on costs like paper, printing and mailing bills, which over the years adds up to saving quite a bit for each customer. Typically, most utility companies add a small charge for sending you a bill by paper. Electronic Billing is a lot more cost-effective for the company and the customer.

Although it is very underrated, E-Billing also plays a role with its "green" practices when swapping over. Simply switching from paying bills using paper checks, invoices, and envelopes to using online payment services and changing how you get your account allows individuals to save many trees over their lifetime.

When it is time to pay the bills, head over to the bank, fill out forms, purchase stamps, and then head to the post office to mail your checks. E-Billing lets you log into your account, and with a few easy clicks, you're all done; the bill is received and paid. This makes the experience quick, free, and 100 percent secure.

Thorhild county is working to reduce waste and costs and make life a little easier for its community members. It is simple to contact them to sign up today and have your utility bill emailed to you monthly, just like that. If interested, contact the Thorhild County utility department at 780-398-3741 ext. 2811 or email utilities@thorhildcounty.com or visit bit.ly/thorhild\_ebill to complete the sign-up form online.

Truth and Reconciliation Day

By Myrina Carter

From September 26 to September 30, many communities supported national Truth and Reconciliation Day. Some schools and businesses celebrated the week as they were closed on September 30, but that did not stop many people from sharing their support. As they attended the informational town events, many community members wore orange shirts supporting the "Every Child Matters" movement.

Truth and Reconciliation Day is a day which flourished from Orange Shirt Day, a day supporting the experiences of aboriginal residential school survivors and honouring those who did not survive. It is a day to engage in meaningful discussions about the history of the residential school system. The national day allows the public to recognize and commemorate the intergenerational harm that residential schools have caused in indigenous families and communities.

The Town of Redwater planned community events for many to attend. On September 28 at Pembina Place Cultural Centre, they hosted a pizza dinner and discussion about the meaning of truth and reconciliation. Community Services also shared a movie called "We were children," which community members 16 and up viewed. On September 30, the Town of Redwater hosted a flag-raising ceremony in the town office parking lot, which included speeches and stories on residential schools. Along with family fun reflection activities and children's book readings, they showcased some children-friendly videos and offered resources for Truth and Reconciliation, which was all held at Pembina Place Cultural Centre.

Truth and Reconciliation Day not only brings honour and healing to aboriginal survivors and their families but also shares knowledge with the rest of the people in our country.

Smoky Lake honours Indigenous children and families on National Day of Truth and Reconciliation

Filled with emotion, Trevor Bowen talks about his gruelling experience as a non-Indigenous child at the residential school. After sixty years, he is still moved by the memories of children being abused.

By Irene van der Kloet

It is the second year that the National Day of Truth and Reconciliation is celebrated across Canada. For Smoky Lake, it meant a day in which people could come together at Nekinan House to hear the stories of the gruelling events at residential schools, the struggles of Indigenous people to get a sense of belonging in Canadian society and the celebration of Indigenous traditions. Nekinan House is operated by the Métis Nation of Alberta and has recently undergone substantial renovations, resulting in a gorgeous facility full of cultural artifacts. Reconciliation is about Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples coming to terms with events of the past in a manner that rebuilds trust and respectful relationships and focuses on bettering future generations in Canada. To celebrate that, a workshop was held in the morning to make a Medicine Wheel.

The facilitator explained the Medicine Wheel and what it means to Indigenous people. In the afternoon, a crowd of about 70 people, Indigenous and non-Indigenous, came together to listen to the keynote speaker, Donna Webster, executive director of the Native Friendship Centre in Lac La Biche. Donna talked about her family and about how the lives of Indigenous people can be changed for the better. "Colonization and residential schools was a time of assimilation of Indigenous people, taking away their culture and language." The words may sound simple, but their meaning goes so deep that many people would have difficulty grasping what that would mean. For Indigenous people, it meant that they were not allowed to practice their cultural traditions or speak their language. In residential schools, their hair was cut, and their traditional clothes were taken away. The children's lives changed entirely without the support of their families. Donna emphasizes that it is essential that Indigenous people can reintroduce their culture, learn from their elders, and appreciate that people wear orange shirts to show their support. The orange shirt has a history: Phyllis (Jack) Webstad from Dog Creek, B.C., had just turned six years old when her granny - who was quite poor - bought her a bright orange shirt to wear on the first day of residential school. She was very excited about it, and great was her disappointment when she was stripped of her clothes, including the orange shirt, on the first day of school. She saw it back on other kids but never got it back. Since then, the colour orange always reminded her of the loss of that shirt and how her feelings didn't matter, how no one cared and how she felt worthless.

Many attendants wore an orange shirt on this day, showing their respect and compassion. Trevor Bowen shared his harrowing experience as a non-Indigenous child in a residential school where his mother taught. He remembers the children that were punished and abused and can still hear them screaming from pain. The remaining part of the afternoon was filled with Metis dancing with an excellent explanation of the meaning of the dances and how they came about when European settlers first came to Canada. The day was concluded with a tour of Nekinan House.

Thorhild County Family Centre offers fun for the community

By Myrina Carter

The Thorhild County Family Centre has been busy through September, hosting a few different activities and programs for community members to come together and attend. The focus of the local family centre is to promote safely integrating children and families into home and community life. They have support teams which are made up of several services through the family centre and beyond. They work closely with immediate and extended families, schools and community organizations, which help encourage the best support network for a child and family.

Throughout September, the family centre has hosted playground play, wellness walks, and coffee talks, each promoting different support to the community. Playground play was also enjoyed at the Thorhild pool playground. Many families attended with their little ones, enjoyed outdoor recreation, and partook in gross motor play. Another activity included in the month was wellness walks, supporting a healthy lifestyle one step at a time and allowing people who signed up to interact with other community members with the same interests. Wellness walks help build personal resiliency and enable people to invest in their physical and emotional well-being. Coffee Talk was held at the Thorhild Library and was hosted for parents or caregivers of children to get together for facilitated discussions. The group allowed people to explore the ups and downs, struggles and joys of parenting, and topics were chosen by the guests who participated. Many in attendance have given a lot of great feedback and kind words like, "this group is so informative and helpful. It's just nice to get together with other parents who experience many of the same problems and share many different solutions." The talks included reviewing news articles, blogs, and webinars and watching some videos, all of which supply support to everyone.

Give the Thorhild County Family Centre a call at 780-656-6016 for additional information about future programs and activities they will be hosting.

have needed critical medical care."

The hardship the family experienced is what all started the new annual fundraiser for Jedd and his family. The annual fundraiser began last year in 2021, where they raised $2700. Amped to do better this year, the Serben family added in the sale of ice cream from the Serben Farms ice cream shack. Along with the freshly squeezed lemonade, they also added a new blue raspberry lemonade which was a massive hit with guests and helped boost the amount of money raised to $3800. All proceeds from the family raised through the years were 100 percent donated to STARS.

Julie Serben said, "We encourage online donations to the fundraiser, and STARS has a great web page for us to facilitate those donations. Next year we aim to raise $5000, which is the approximate cost of one STAR'S flight. We are so thankful for such great local support for our fundraiser and those who donated from afar. We also received a $500. from Hammerstrap Industries, which is amazing, and we greatly appreciate it!"

SHARING THE ROAD DURING FALL HARVEST

Share the Road

Be Prepared to Share Your Lane – Remember some farm vehicles are very wide and may take up more than one lane. Some vehicles also have protruding equipment that can be hard to see. Give farm equipment space as some vehicles may not be able to pull off the road due to equipment weight or shoulder issues.

Slow Down

Be alert and watch out for slow-moving vehicle signs. A fully loaded combine, tractor or truck moves much slower and takes more time to stop than the average vehicle. Equipment operators cannot always see vehicles especially if they are following too close and in the equipments blind spot. Slow down when approaching and give yourself plenty of space and be prepared to stop.

Be Careful When Passing

Only pass if it's safe to do so – Farm equipment is often wider than the traffic lane, wait for a safe passing zone, watch out for oncoming traffic, and never take a chance by making a blind pass on a curve or a hill. Be aware that farmers with long or wide farming equipment sometimes need to make a wide turn, before attempting to pass make sure equipment isn't moving over in preparation to turn. When finished passing, don't stop or slow down in front of the farm vehicle. Large equipment can't brake as quickly as a car.

Staying active in Redwater through the winter

By Myrina Carter

The town of Redwater is working on doing its part when it comes to staying active throughout the fall and winter months. There are many activities for community members to enjoy, including curling, skating, and indoor walking.

Recreational skating is offered to children; different sessions are planned for children ages four to six and seven. Signing children up for skating provides many benefits; it allows them to stay active and have fun. Children get a chance to go fast and slide on the ice, but under the supervision of professionals. Kids learn about way more than just skating; they will learn to fall, set goals and work toward them, work hard and take directions, and practice makes perfect. In addition, they will make friends and build new relationships. Most of all, it keeps them fit and healthy, building their athleticism.

If you are interested, contact the community services office at 780-942-4101 or email csoordinator@redwater.ca.

The Redwater Curling Club offers a junior curling program for ages six to eighteen, with no experience required, is only 20 dollars for the entire year and runs Monday evenings. Curling allows children to grow and build new friendships with their peers. It will enable optimum physical development, providing extraordinary strength built from brushing and leg thrusting. Curling provides children with valuable cross-training for many other sports. They are playing start to finish in every game and every optimistic competition. Contact the Redwater Curling Club at 780-718-1841 for any further questions.

Another great way to stay active in the winter is at Pembina Place which offers indoor walking from September to March, Tuesdays and Thursdays. Season passes only cost 20 dollars, and you only need to bring indoor shoes. Indoor walking offers many benefits, including strengthening bones, improving balance, and coordination, lowering blood pressure and weight maintenance. Walking is an ideal aerobic exercise; it is low impact but uses over 200 muscles. Walking is also good for your mental health and improves subjective well-being. Walking is also a social activity, whether meeting up with friends for a pleasant stroll or meeting new people who enjoy walking and staying active. Call the front desk at 780-942-4101 or drop in at 4944 53 Street in Redwater.

Staying active throughout the winter has benefits for all. In colder temperatures, your heart doesn't have to work as hard. You sweat less and expend less energy. Work with family and friends and stay active and healthy through the cold season.

Brenda Fulmore acclaimed as new Aspen View Public Schools Ward 1 (Northwest) Trustee

Aspen View Public Schools has declared Brenda Fulmore elected by acclamation to the vacant position of Ward 1 (Northwest) Trustee.

Two candidates submitted nomination forms by the deadline of 12 noon Monday, September 26, 2022. However, one candidate withdrew their nomination within 24 hours, as permitted under the Local Authorities Election Act.

Fulmore has lived in the Smith/Honda area for 31 years, ranching with her husband and raising their three children. She also spent 20 years working as an educational assistant at Smith School.

"Smith School played a huge part in our kids' development throughout their elementary and junior high years. The skills they learned as children are still present in their lives today," she said. "I enjoyed my years working at Smith School and it was rewarding to be part of helping students succeed and being part of a staff that truly wanted to make things better for their school and community.

"I welcome this opportunity to be involved in our schools in a different capacity," she added. "I look forward to serving the area - which I recognize is large and diverse - its families and students to the best of my ability."

"We are very pleased Brenda will be joining us as Ward 1 trustee," Aspen View Public Schools Board of Trustees Chair Candyce

Nikipelo commented. "It's always important for that ward to have a strong community representative, and with Brenda's previous involvement with the school, she will no doubt be an incredible asset to the board."

Trust: hard to gain, easily broken

By Irene van der Kloet

Throughout our lives, we build trusting relationships with other people. To trust someone is the result of an ongoing social process between people in which a person observes others' behaviour and bases their amount of trust in them on these observations. What are these trusting observations? Among the vast amount of literature about the notion of trust, four components seem to stand out: competence, predictability, honesty and benevolence. Competence pertains to the knowledge to perform a task. Predictability pertains to timeliness, accuracy, and meeting reasonable expectations. Honesty pertains to following up on one's word, and benevolence relates to the willingness to do someone a favour, even if it is at one's own expense. They will be clarified with an example. Imagine the following situation: Saturday night, and there is a leak in your house's plumbing system that cannot wait until Monday. In your search for a plumber, you come across one that says he'll be there in an hour. The plumber comes after an hour and five minutes; he looks at the leak and fixes it. He also mentions that your plumbing needs some upgrades to prevent future problems. To what extent have you started to trust this plumber? He was pretty predictable in his arrival time (predictability); he fixed the problem (competence); he may have been honest in his comment that your plumbing system needs upgrades (you might want a second opinion). He was willing to come on a Saturday night (benevolence). If this plumber consistently does good work and fixes a problem that is a problem, you may start to trust him; It will take repeated interactions with him to confirm your increasing trust in him. During this process, a failure in your expectations regarding his competence, predictability, honesty or benevolence may slow down or break down the trusting process.

In another example, you lend money to a trusted friend. The friend promises to pay you back within three months but fails to do so, coming up with excuses. In this case, you start to question his honesty, benevolence, and predictability; this friend is breaking down your trust in him. The examples - though simplified - indicate a few important aspects of building trust: first, building trust is a process that requires consistency in the four components of competence, predictability, honesty and benevolence. Positive consistency in all four components is essential to build trust with someone. Secondly, trust has two cognitive components (competence and predictability) that can easily be "measured." The other two components, honesty and benevolence, lie more in the emotional zone. Thirdly, it takes time to build trust, so we often hear it is "hard to gain."

Fourthly, once trust has been gained, it can quickly be broken down when a person does not live up to the four components. Much more can be said about trust than can be covered in this article. But next time you think about trusting someone, think about competence, predictability, honesty and benevolence. Irene van der Kloet is a retired officer of the Dutch Army with a Ph.D. in sociology. She wrote her dissertation about Trust in 2005.
